Foster care is a collection of people, institutions and actions intended to provide temporary care and upbringing for children whose parents are unable to provide this.

The duty to support a family experiencing difficulties in fulfilling its caring and upbringing functions and to organise foster care in Poland rests with the local government units and the government administration bodies within the scope established by the Polish law. Local government units dealing with foster care are: Municipal Social Assistance Centre or District Family Assistance Centre. Both of these institutions perform the role of Foster Care Organiser.

In Poland we distinguish two forms of foster care. The first is institutional foster care (facility), which includes various types of institutions, and the second is family foster care, which includes families. In the institutional foster care contracted guardians are look after children. In the family foster care married or unmarried person permanently are taking care of children.

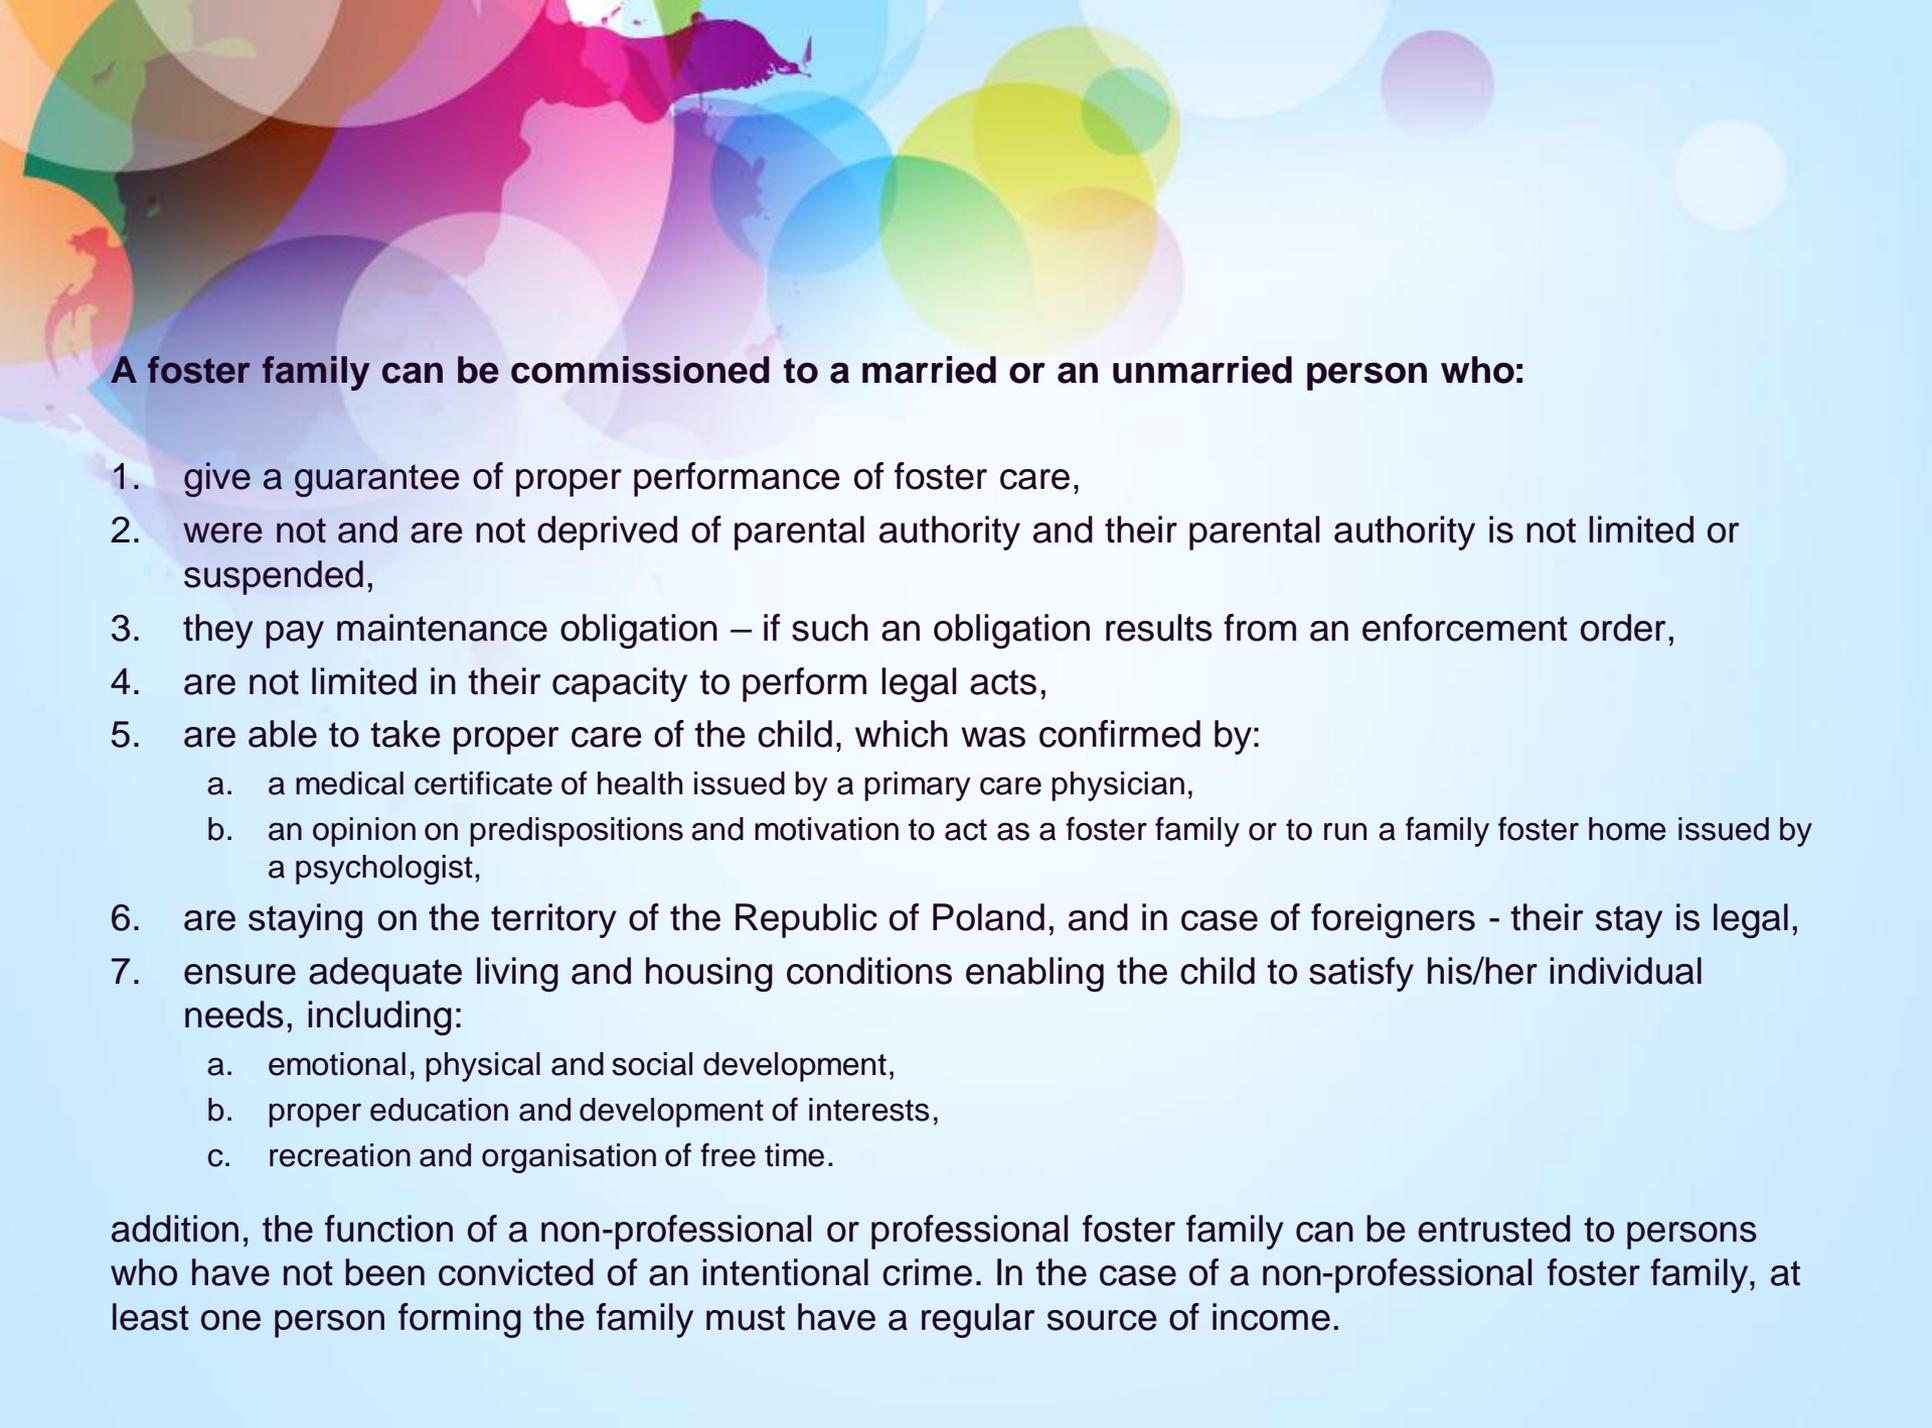

In Poland we can distinguish four types of foster families:

- a) Related foster families (grandmother, grandfather, adult brother or sister). These families aren't receive a salary for their work but financial aid to partially cover the costs of maintaining a child in their family in the amount of €162.
- b) Non-professional foster families. These caregiver are not related or not closely related with the child. Neither these families aren't receive a salary for their work. They receive financial aid to partially cover the costs of maintaining a child in their family in the amount of €246.
- c) Professional foster families. These families receive financial aid to partially cover the costs of maintaining a child in their family in the amount of €246. They also receive a salary for their work (€600 - €760). They look after up to 4 unrelated children. One parent permanently takes care of the entrusted children. These kind of families require appropriate training and qualification for taking care of children. Professional foster families divided into emergency care foster families (they look after children on an intervention basis, during the time of court proceeding), specialist professional foster families (they look after children with special needs) and professional foster families (they look after children with a regulated legal situation).
- d) Family children's home. This is usually a family that cares for unrelated children in their own flat or house. A family children's home can accommodate no more than 8 children in total at any one time. The person running a family children's home receives remuneration and funds not only to partially cover the child's living costs and for their work, but also to maintain the flat or house in which the family children's home is run.

A child is placed in a foster family:

- on the basis of a court decision,
- in the case of an urgent need to secure the child - at the request or with the consent of the child's parents, on the basis of an agreement concluded between the foster family and the province/city/town governor competent for the place of residence of the family.

A foster family can be commissioned to a married or an unmarried person who:

1. give a guarantee of proper performance of foster care,
2. were not and are not deprived of parental authority and their parental authority is not limited or suspended,
3. they pay maintenance obligation – if such an obligation results from an enforcement order,
4. are not limited in their capacity to perform legal acts,
5. are able to take proper care of the child, which was confirmed by:
 - a. a medical certificate of health issued by a primary care physician,
 - b. an opinion on predispositions and motivation to act as a foster family or to run a family foster home issued by a psychologist,
6. are staying on the territory of the Republic of Poland, and in case of foreigners - their stay is legal,
7. ensure adequate living and housing conditions enabling the child to satisfy his/her individual needs, including:
 - a. emotional, physical and social development,
 - b. proper education and development of interests,
 - c. recreation and organisation of free time.

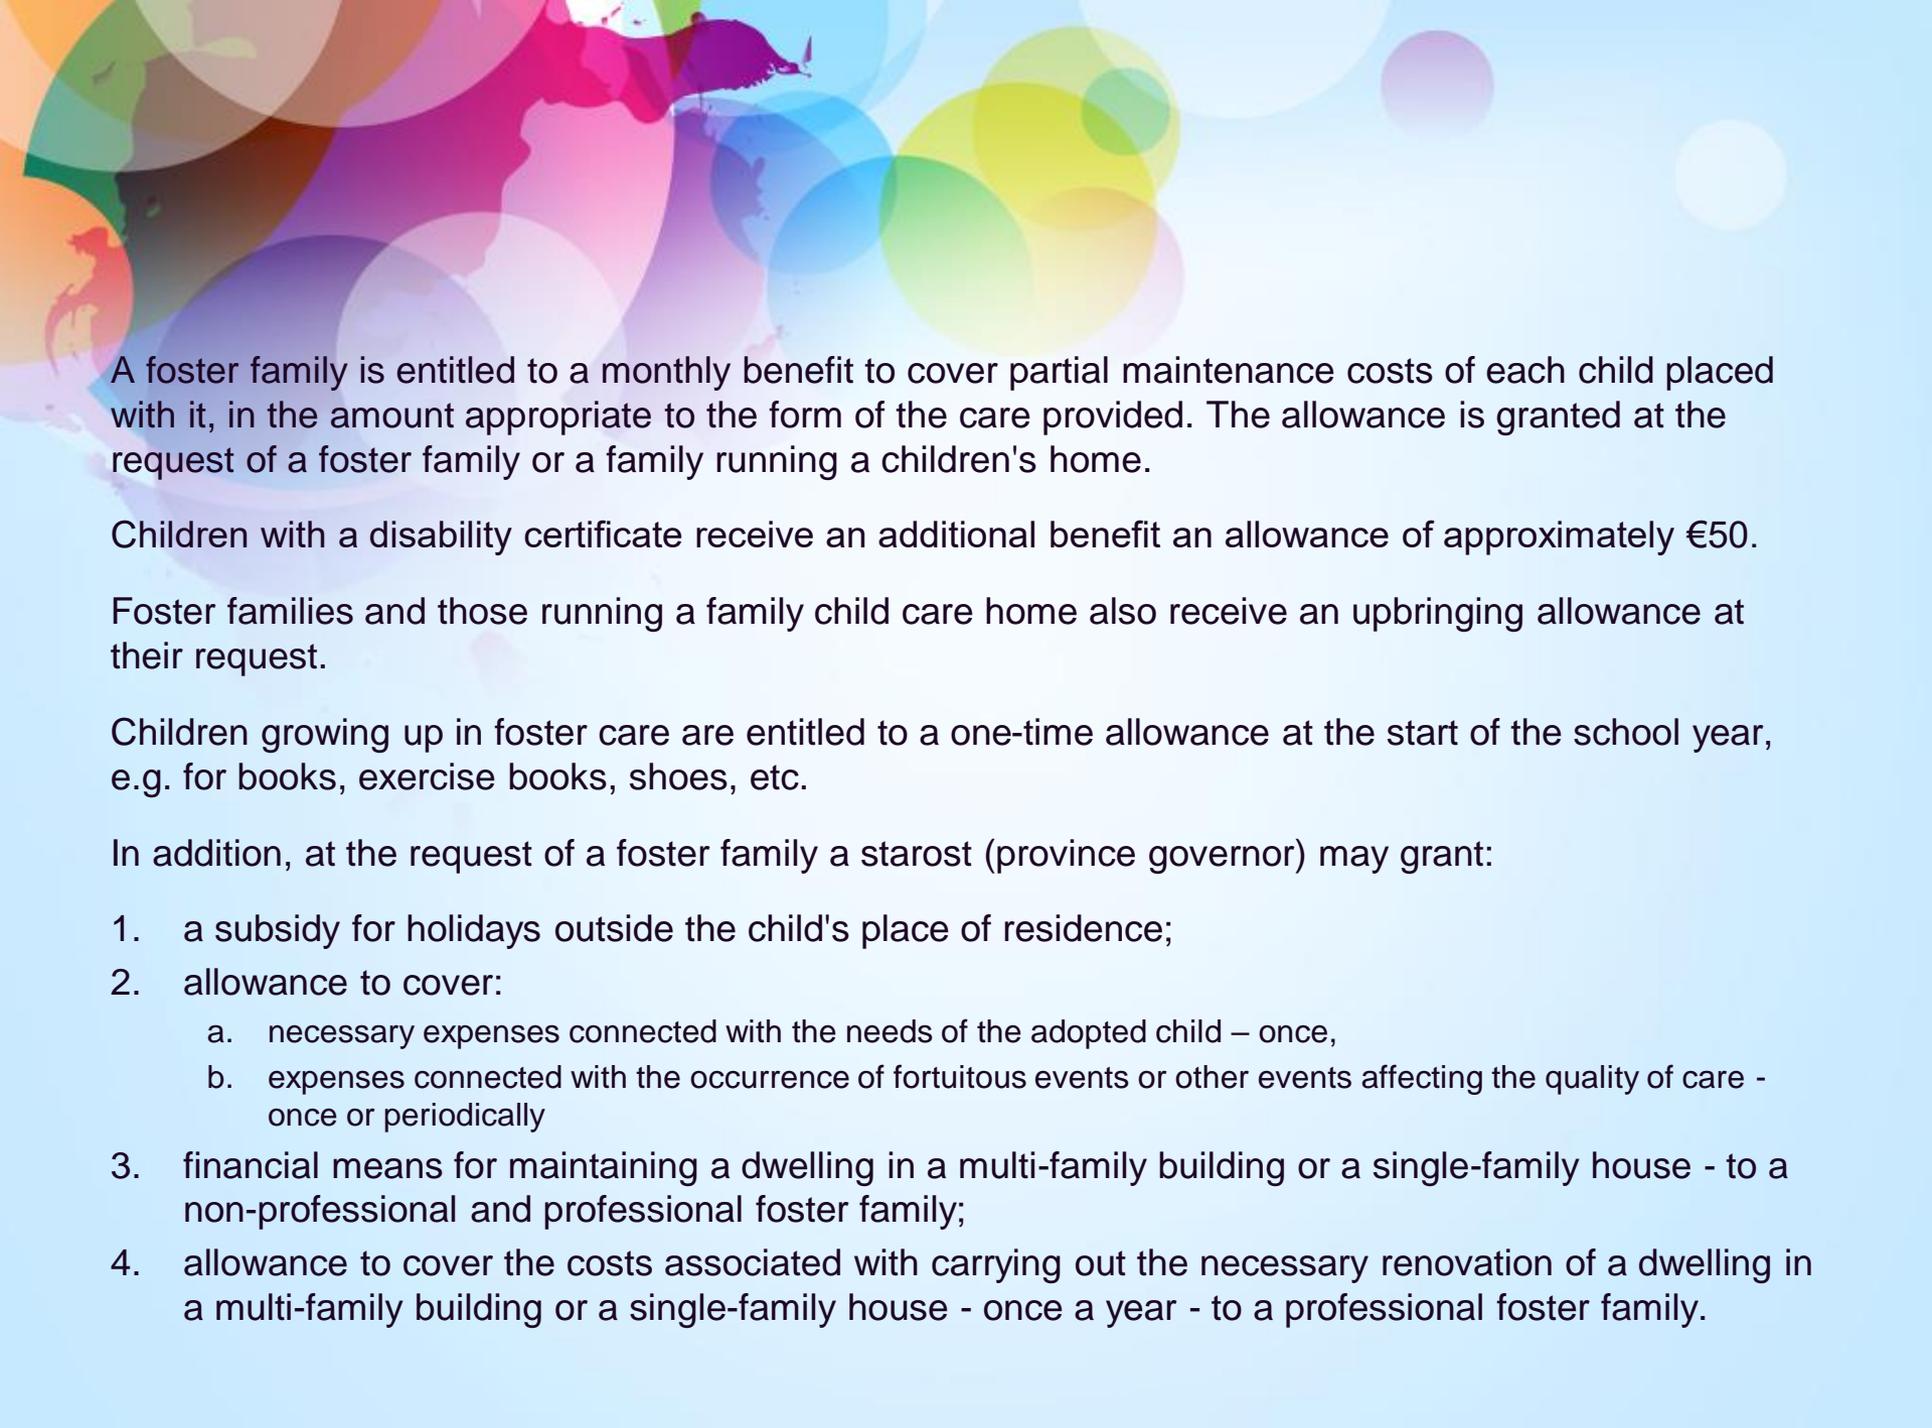

addition, the function of a non-professional or professional foster family can be entrusted to persons who have not been convicted of an intentional crime. In the case of a non-professional foster family, at least one person forming the family must have a regular source of income.

A child may be taken into one of the forms of foster care from the moment of birth or older, however, not for longer than until it reaches the age of majority (18 years old). In a situation when a ward continues his/her education, they may remain with the family, upon its consent, however, not longer than until he/she reaches the age of 25.

A foster family is entitled to a monthly benefit to cover partial maintenance costs of each child placed with it, in the amount appropriate to the form of the care provided. The allowance is granted at the request of a foster family or a family running a children's home.

Children with a disability certificate receive an additional benefit an allowance of approximately €50.

Foster families and those running a family child care home also receive an upbringing allowance at their request.

Children growing up in foster care are entitled to a one-time allowance at the start of the school year, e.g. for books, exercise books, shoes, etc.

In addition, at the request of a foster family a starost (province governor) may grant:

1. a subsidy for holidays outside the child's place of residence;
2. allowance to cover:
 - a. necessary expenses connected with the needs of the adopted child – once,

Related and non-professional foster families are entitled to maternity leave, followed by parental leave. In total, the parent can be at home with the child for one year. They will receive maternity pay for this time. After the 20-week maternity leave, foster parents are entitled to parental leave of 32 weeks if they adopt one child, and up to 34 weeks if they adopt two children. Maternity leave is granted, however, no longer than until the child is 7 years old, and up to the age of 10 in the case of a child to whom a decision has been made to postpone compulsory education for health reasons, for example. Parental leave may be taken in one go or in parts, not later than until the child turns 6 (until the end of the calendar year in which the child turns 6). Irrespective of the use of other leaves, a foster father who has taken a child is entitled to paternity leave, however, no longer than until the lapse of 12 months from the date when the decision on taking child in foster care becomes final and until the child reaches the age of 7 years or 10 years in the case of a child in respect of whom it has been decided to postpone compulsory education. Paternity leave does not exceed 2 weeks. At the same time the child's mother may be on maternity leave and the father on paternity leave.

Like any other permanent employee, an each foster family is entitled to up to 30 calendar days off work a year. During that time, the children in foster care are taken care of by a support family, i.e. another foster family who is friends with the foster family or a family that has also completed a special course of study, but has not decided to take in children permanently and only occasionally hosts them. It is often relatives or friends of the foster parents who set up a foster family to take over the care of the children during holidays or emergencies such as hospital stays.
